Home Care Assistance Releases Comprehensive Aging in Place Resource

Leading provider of in-home care has partnered with the Alzheimer's Association, Village to Village Network and other senior care experts on a magazine to inform seniors and their families with information on how to live happier, healthier lives at home.

(Palo Alto, CA – July 25, 2016) Home Care Assistance, the leading provider of in-home care for seniors across the United States, Canada and Australia, has released Aging in Place, a 48-page magazine that includes expert advice from organizations like the Alzheimer's Association, Village to Village Network and Home Care Assistance's own senior care specialists. The 48-page magazine includes tips for living well at home, preventing caregiver "burnout," hospital to home care, and many other issues affecting older Americans who are aging in-home, as well as their families.

"At Home Care Assistance, we know how important access to information for seniors and their families is, especially those who are aging in home," said Home Care Assistance Director of Marketing and Communications Megan Heinen. "Aging in Place is a must-have resource for older adults and their families' members as they navigate the various issues that arise for those who have made the decision to stay in their home as they get older. The expert advice in the magazine from organizations like the Alzheimer's Association, Village to Village Network and others is invaluable to any family with a loved one who's planning age in-home."

Ninety percent of seniors prefer to age at home, and Aging in Place gives them and their families members access to information about how to successfully stay at home, even as living independently becomes more difficult due to the frailty or chronic conditions that often come with aging.
